Whiff of fresh air

Of late, there have been winds of change that have not only acknowledged the existence of corruption and deficit in governance, but also swayed in battlefield to deal with the menace. Gone are the days when the prime ministers felt that it was no use crying from rooftops that there was corruption as it demoralized bureaucracy, or that corruption was a universal phenomenon, or it was systemic, or expressed regret, helplessness and bemoaned that the intended benefits did not reach the beneficiaries, or recent advice to an author 'not to spoil India's image by going on and on about this'. All this is now objected to by the suffering masses who have felt impact of neglect through inflation, rising prices, loss of public exchequer through non-performing assets of Rs. 1.92 lakh crores, and conveyed their disgust for insensitive and flagrant play with public funds on irrelevant and unnecessary holiday jaunts by members of legislative assemblies to tourist spots, and celebrations and tamashas as reflection of utter insensitivity to the plight of insecure people who need care and attention.

The fresh air has come from the reports of the CAG, judicial pronouncements by the apex court not only on the scams but also in denial of privilege of continuity as elected representatives after conviction, the pressure of the civil society dealing with public interest, the ubiquitous media having panoptic penetration into the depths of sleaze and wrongdoing and highlighting it, etc. There are also attempts, though constrained, to free the CBI 'parrot' from the cage of political masters. Another entrant in the club is a fledgling political party that has assumed power in the nation's capital after doing well in elections on the plank of dealing with corruption and pursuing the interests of common people through promise of good governance, yet to be actualized in action.

One of the outcomes of its success is change in the strategies of all political parties that have started harping on the twin agenda of anti-corruption and governance, including development. The receptivity of ruling parties of these agendas should have increased as these objectives are imperative for their success and cannot be ignored. It is a fitting occasion for TI India to seek reform, especially in the areas of making the governments commit to the integrity pact and other projects. They would now find it embarrassing to say no to our projects that are designed to do good for the common person in which political executive/ rulers can take credit as there are many stakes in ignoring the same.

Board of Management Meeting

The Chairman hoped that TI-S decision on TII Re-accreditation could be communicated shortly. Expressing his concern about lack of funds for core function, he suggested that donors be persuaded to allocate more funds for administrative expenditure in excess of present ceiling of 20%, besides trying out other means to raise funds.

While reviewing the minutes of last BoM, concerns were expressed about direct correspondence with TI-S by certain members.
