Awaiting a new dawn

Many law enforcement officers feel that human rights have been imposed under the influence of affluent countries and are considered as another stroke of the colonial mindset of the rich countries with hegemonic influence. They argue that the concept was incorporated in the Constitution of India only after the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR). That this is not true was recently highlighted during the Transparency International India's Sixth Annual Lecture, delivered by Shri Soli Sorabjee, former Attorney General of India. Without getting into the emotional depth of the past, he cleared the baffled ignorance of many by informing that the concept of fundamental rights was espoused by Lokmanya Tilak in his call for Swaraj. This idea was reiterated by Annie Besant, and leaders of the National Congress during various sessions. The UDHR was announced in 1948, whereas the fundamental rights preceded the international document.

The words press, prisons, travel, speedy trial, compensation, etc., do not exist in the Constitution. Yet there is freedom of press as a right, and rights for treatment of prisoners, right to speedy trial, right to travel abroad (remember, it was a privilege to get a passport before the judgment in Maneka Gandhi case), right to privacy, right to bail, etc. This miracle has been performed by the Supreme Court that had, through creative interpretation of the articles on fundamental rights have conferred these rights on all individuals. Included in the creativity was the invention of the public interest litigation that could draw the attention of the apex court through a postcard, a letter, a news item, or an article in the press, and the court felt duty bound to look after the plight of the sufferers. In the process, the rule of locus standi was relaxed which permitted anyone to fight for the rights to the indigent, the illiterate, and the dispossessed.

Till now the Supreme Court has expanded the ambit of rights to include many more than indicated in the articles. Similarly, there are many landmark decisions on collective rights that have attended to the issues of environment. What is now hoped for is the interpretation of corruption as a violation of human rights. Though the Court has called corruption a cancer and a malignant disease, and has also penalized the culprits without any concession, whatsoever, by taking a practical and contemptuous view of the abominable disease, yet its focus on corruption as a human rights issue is eagerly awaited. It is a fact that every crime is a violation of one of the fundamental rights or legislation under the Directive Principles of State Policy. The act of corrupt official diminishes the dignity of the individual, diverts to his personal advantage what is due to the poor person as an investment for his education, health, environment, employment, and quality of life. Thus a corrupt official deprives the people of their rights. Every act of corruption, collusive or coercive, is a robbery of sorts and must be seriously viewed not only as a crime under the Prevention of Corruption Act or economic offences, but also one that deprives people of their right in one form or the other. Such an interpretation shall be a prelude to the right to good governance.

A new dawn shall arrive. It is a matter of time.

India 37th among 102 in govt. transparency index

According to Washington-based World Justice Project report, released on March 26, India ranks 37 out of 102 countries on the Open Government Index 2015 on how transparent the governments are and the ease with which citizens can hold their government accountable. Those that topped the list are high income countries such as Sweden, New Zealand, Norway, Denmark and Netherlands “as they have more resources and more people connected to the internet.”

Of the four parameters used to rank countries, India ranked 27 for publicized laws and government data. But it ranked 66 on Right to Information index. The study showed that worldwide 40% of those surveyed were aware of laws supporting their right to access government data. The survey in India was carried out in Mumbai, Delhi and Bangalore.

Special Board Meeting

During the Special BOM meeting was held on Jan 17 to discuss the Report of Enquiry Committee. Dr. S K Agarwal, the outgoing Chairman, welcomed all the Board members, particularly the newly elected ones, namely, Dr Raka Arya, Ms Anju Bala, Shri Ajay Dubey and Shri A K Jain. He gave a brief summary of the decisions taken in the last BoM Meeting, including the highlights and recommendations of the Enquiry Committee Report prepared by Shri I C Srivastava. Thereafter, he proposed the name of Shri P. S. Bawa for TII Chairman. It was endorsed by all members unanimously.

The new Chairman took over the charge. He informed that Shri Kohli had obtained the stay from the Delhi High Court against any action on the Report of the Enquiry Committee. The Chairman read the order that whatever decision was taken by the TII Board or General Body shall not be given effect to till further orders. There being no bar on the Board to consider the Enquiry Report and take a decision, Shri I C Srivastava briefed the Board about the major issues and the recommendations made in his report. The affected members were requested
